Too Young for This: Facing Cancer Under 40

By Amanda Schaffer
Jan. 30, 2007

"When I was diagnosed with cancer, all I really wanted was to connect to other people my age," said the group's founder Zachary, 32, of Brooklyn, who learned at 21 that he had pancreatic brain cancer.

Cancer Sucks. Survivorship Doesn't Have To.

Matthew Zachary doesn't do anything halfway. After being told in 1995 at age 21 that he'd "likely be dead in 6 months" from brain cancer, he survived and went on to found Stupid Cancer in 2007, an advocacy organization credited with kickstarting the adolescent and young adult (AYA) cancer movement.

This podcast absolutely belongs on your 'top shelf' of podcasts! What I appreciate most is the 'real' factor here...real conversations, real personalities, and so many stories that inform and inspire by way of an invigorating exploration into the healthcare world, and delightfully far beyond. Listening to Matthew and his guests is like sitting down to a beer with new friends, and coming away with a better mind and spirit because of it!

ABOUT MATTHEW ZACHARY

A 28-year brain cancer survivor, Matthew Zachary is an American advocate passionate about putting the patient at the center of every conversation, with a storied career spanning entertainment, advertising, marketing, nonprofit, digital health, public policy, life sciences, and broadcast media.

As Founder of the award-winning nonprofit Stupid Cancer, Matthew started the young adult cancer movement in 2007, where he hosted and produced 'The Stupid Cancer Show,' America's first healthcare talk radio show (before podcasts existed.)

Between his award-winning documentary, The Cancer Mavericks: A History of Survivorship, and his Top-10 award-winning podcast Out of Patients, Matthew — whom some dub 'The Podfather of Healthcare' — is one of the country's most influential talents and visionary voices.

Matthew is currently principal at Matthew Zachary Worldwide, a media production company, digital health platform, talent agency, and SME consulting group for the life science and nonprofit sectors.

He lives with his wife and twins in Brooklyn.
